Colin Archer

Honorary Chairman

Asia-Pacific Environmental Centre Initiative

Colin has been involved with industry and government all his working life and is very well versed in the difficulties governments and private corporations in advanced and emerging economies have trying to meet their economic goals while taking into account the need to reduce carbon emissions and attract investment for their infrastructure mining projects.

Colin is the past honorary Chairman of the Technology in Government Committee, past President of the Australian Film Foundation and the Australian Computer Security Institute.

The Technology in Government Committee was set up through the Australian Prime Minister's Office in 1987 and was responsible for promoting productivity improvement in government and industry across the three tiers of government in Australia.

He is a present/past member/fellow of various management associations including the Company Directors Association of Australia, Chartered Institute of Corporate Managers, Society of Senior Executives and the Government Technology Users Association. He has published articles in the Australia Financial Review, Finance and Productivity News, NSW Productivity Magazine and was for a number of years the publisher/editor for the Government Technology Guide.

Colin has held different senior executive positions within the Australian Government including; Department of Labour and National Service, Department of Industrial Relations, CES Administration, Department of Immigration, Defence and the Department of Productivity. He held senior executive positions with the Productivity Promotion Council of Australia and the Productivity Groups Advisory Council.

Colin has coordinated and closed financing, mergers, acquisitions and strategic alliances throughout Australia, West Africa and South East Asia. He takes time out from his busy business schedule to play golf and actively participate in several Business Education and Training Programmes. He is married with two children and three grandchildren. He lives in the Eastern Suburbs of Sydney Australia when he is not traveling on business.
